

One day, AI will replace the majority of human jobs.

Sometimes, the thought of having machines and robots do all the work that we are studying so hard for, makes me anxious. The thought of not being able to afford a machine and the fact that there might not be a job available that a computer can not do in the near future agitates me. I can choose to look at the brighter side and assume all will be okay seeing as the technology is advancing every day but i can't stop and wonder; What about the poor, those who won't be able to afford for example Robots? Will there still be any need for talent since a machine can do anything you program it to do? What will be the point of having a pretty good memory if there is a 1TB hard drive that stores data in microseconds?

It is not that i am against artificial intelligence. In fact, i believe that artificial intelligence has and will benefit a lot of people and also improve the quality of life. Today, i can access my phone with a fingerprint, voice recognition or an eye scan. What will it be tomorrow? Today we have heat sensors, automatic alarms, automatic cars. What will it be like tomorrow?

I am a firm believer that there's good and bad in everything we do but all we have to do is to turn all experiences whether good or bad into opportunities.
